The sketch of Father Gavazzi's life and career seemed to be called for from the interest excited by him during his short stay in New-York. It will likewise be recessary for those who have not followed his lectures, to expain t e nature of his mission and the motives which actuate him.

Gavazzi, a u an of liter 1 feelings and generous impuses, from his Gaversi, a near of liter. I feelings and generous impulses, from the earliest years deeply felt the state of bondage, both social and political, in which the Italians were kept. Actuated by these feelings, he strove to discover the cause, and som came to the conclusion that the ignorance in which the people were kept, the higotry and superstition in which they were encouraged, were the causes of their social and political debasement.

Frofoundly versed in the var one systems of the Church of Rome, Guerri soon discovered its falselmood, its utter want of principle, its culpable inculgence, its cowardly threats—he saw that through this describil code, miscalled religion, the people were ignorant, volution arise were maintained in a position to insure the temperal and despolic power of those who governed them; he knew that instead of seeking to civilize and enlighten, the priests sought to mislead and suniave.

This conviction ind Gaversi to another, namely, that a religion entailing such consequences could not be the religion of God; he studied the Scriptures, he beheld the truth, and he preclaimed it.

The regeneration of Haly is his object, to give the people confidence in themselves, in Heaven, and not in their priests, to instruct them, to civilize, that they may rise and claim the right of every individual, liberty of conscience and treedom of action. This is the aim of his crusade, nobier far than that crusade undertaken to free the holy sopulchre, for it is to free the souls of millions from eterari bondage, and give the people their share in the prosperities of life, monopolized by a privileged class, and specially by the dissolute clergy of Rome.

The publishers of the present life of Gaverri have received the following letter from the Facher, and have made the corrections alluded to, which have be a turnished them in manaccipt. The present may therefore be considered as the most complete and authentic biography yet pub ished of this extraordinary man.
